"Years of work have confirmed for me more and more clearly that children deserve respect, trust and kindness, that it is pleasant to be with them in a cheerful atmosphere of gentle feelings, merry laughter, an atmosphere of strenuous first efforts and surprises, of pure, clear, and heart-warming joys, that working with children in such an atmosphere is exhilarating, fruitful, and attractive."

"The child is a foreigner who doesn't know the language, isn't familiar with the street plan, is ignorant of the laws and customs of the land. At times he likes to go exploring on his own; when things get rough, he asks for directions and help. What he needs is a guide who will politely answer his questions."

*'I call for a Magna Charta
[i.e. Constitution] of children's rights.*

I have found three basic ones, though there may be more:

- 1. the right of the child to die;*
- 2. the right of the child to the present day;*
- 3. the right of the child to be who he is'*

"If I dedicate a disproportionately large amount of space to the court - I do so through recognition that the court is likely to be a link in the chain that will lead to equal rights to children, to a constitution; it will make it mandatory to declare the rights of children. The child has the right to serious care and a just study of his/her concerns. Up to now everything depends on the good will of the educator, his good or bad mood. The child had no right to protest. We need to put an end to tyranny!"

"The chores in the orphanage already have a seven year history.. All this is in the hands of the educators. The institution's newspaper continues to appear. The court has been in operation for two years without a pause. We have become ready for the experience of self-government...The limits of the parliament's authority should be gradually expanded."

"I wrote at stops, in the field, under a pine tree, on a tree stump. Everything is important and if I don't write it down I'll forget. This would be an irrevocable loss to humankind"
